Military Recruiters: Criminal, Abusive or Suspect Activity
Eight-year Chronological Review of Public Reports as of August 28, 2009
Compiled by Learning Not Recruiting – Toledo, Ohio

By no means should this compilation be considered a definitive report covering all cases of criminal, abusive or suspect activity by military recruiters or the recruiting command. For example, in 2004 the Army alone self-reported over 325 cases of recruiter fraud, with only 35 recruiters relieved of duty (see CBS News report dated July 14, 2005). Self-reported Department of Defense records show that rapes or sexual assaults by military recruiters numbered at least 100 in 2005 (see Kansas City Star report dated August 20, 2006). Our margins in compiling are a result of existing limitations in media database research vs. the military’s access to their own records. All reports we cite have been saved.

This compilation was created to visibly support the widely-held opposition to military recruiters having federally-forced access to youth via schools and access to youth throughout their communities, largely due to exorbitant military recruiting budgets.

Case impugns Marine recruiting Severely mentally disabled and autistic young adult was picked up at his group home by Marine recruiter who helped him enlist; investigating Marine officer stated that recruiter’s testimony was “not believable and he may have even perjured himself;” recruit had spent years on psychotropic drugs, finished high school in a lockdown facility, was treated for attraction to child pornography, and before enlisted, was on the verge of receiving federal long-term disability status; at boot camp, recruit admitted autism to drill instructor; within first 14 days of boot camp, he was in serious trouble with multiple offenses, and was sent for a medical evaluation; autism diagnosis was confirmed with family and medical records show he admitted to lying about his history; yet, medical officer reported back “there was nothing wrong with him,” and he graduated from boot camp; eventually, he was caught with child pornography, went AWOL and was confined in the brig for almost a full year; charged and pleaded guilty to unauthorized absences, possession of child pornography and fraudulent enlistment; sentenced to bad-conduct discharge and four years’ confinement, suspended.

February 13, 2009 – In wake of recruiter suicides, Army orders one-day recruiter stand-down of 8,400 active duty and reserves recruiters
Low morale, stress blamed in Army recruiter suicides

Amidst allegations that Houston, Texas, recruiting battalion’s “chain of command tried to cover up a toxic leadership climate,” Army investigation finds poor leadership, job-related stress, personal matters and medical problems contributed to a string of recruiter suicides; a “rare” one-day Army stand-down ordered (previous stand-down for all military occurred in May 2005, prompted by reports of recruiter abuses, including sex offenses); 4 recruiters, all veterans of combat areas, committed suicide in Houston battalion since 2005; recruiting duty “considered one of the most stressful in the Army, especially in wartime;” Houston command leadership created problems including poor morale, long work hours, unpredictable schedules, restricting recruiters’ time with their families leading to strained personnel relationships; used humiliation on recruiters; one recruiter had been pressured to “admit he was a failure” and report found that contributed to the recruiter’s suicide the following week; nationally, at least 17 recruiters have committed suicide since 2001; recruiters tell of 12 to 14 hour work days 6 or 7 days per week, and, if quotas are missed, recruiters punished with even longer duty hours, threatened with losing rank or being kicked out of the Army; mental health treatment is difficult with little free time and access to doctors and therapists

Woman can’t sue Army for sexual assault by recruiter Appeals court finds that the facts in case “are largely undisputed;” in March 2001, recruiter sergeant claimed he wanted to help female recruit with practice tests for military entrance exam; repeatedly suggested they get together; instead, took her fishing, where he sexually assaulted her, Masturbated in front of her, took her to men’s room stall where he tried to remove her clothing;
she got away and he drove her home where he made yet another sexual advance; he then asked her not to tell anyone as he would risk losing his Army job; she did report him to his supervisor and to local law enforcement; deputy sheriff investigated and was specifically told by an Army employee that there had been a previous complaint of sexual assault against same recruiter; Army admitted they did not investigate previous complaint because they did not believe complainant; Army admitted recruiter had been trained multiple times on inappropriate contact with recruits and that he violated Army restrictions; eventually, he was court martialed and discounted; woman brought suit against the Army for negligence in “screening, training, and supervising” the recruiter, and for “allowing him access to vulnerable young females, failing to train him on inappropriate behavior, and allowing this assault to occur;” her suit failed and the appeals court dismissed her appeal “for lack of subject matter jurisdiction.”
